Heoldo is nova Niche Oben

Helliotapio Naise Danillo

August 14, 2017

WHEN CHELSEA Abingdon Welch earned her pilot's license in 2006, she wanted to reward herself with a woman's aviator watch. But when she searched for one to buy online, it was "crickets."

AT FIRST, she considered getting a watch custom-made, but when she talked about her dream watch in her circle of women pilots, "there were so many people saying this would be amazing," Welch says. Just under 6% of pilots in the U.S. were women as of 2010—a minority, to be sure, but the fact remained that approximately 15,000 female pilots were left without aviator watch options.

SEEING A void in the niche market of high-end watches for adventurous women around the world, Welch decided she would be the one to fill it. She spent a year developing her first products, and in November, 2007 she launched The Abingdon Co. with two completed designs and a website.

TODAY, WELCH'S Las Vegas firm has 10 employees and collaborates with manufacturers in Japan to design, craft and distribute dozens of signature timepieces to customers around the globe for $300 to $800 apiece. Each watch comes in multiple women's sizes and can be made in a wide variety of colors from various materials.

"INITIALLY, I just wanted to make one for me," she says, but "I decided, instead of getting one custom made, I could get 500" and turn the endeavor into something bigger—something that could speak to scores of women like her who are underrepresented in their careers and passions.

ENIVATO

WELCH LEARNED to fly back in 2006, when she was just 22 years old. "I dreamed of becoming a pilot ever since I was 14," when she attended a career seminar near her childhood home in Burbank, Calif. She went for the free food, she recalls, but became enraptured when two pilots spoke about their work.

FROM THAT moment on, she knew what she wanted to do with her life. And after becoming first in flight—in her family, that is—she immersed herself in aviation by joining a local chapter of The Ninety-Nines, an international organization for women pilots.
